THE ATMOSPHERE AND THE COMET.—Prof. John Wise, of Philadelphia, the celebrated astronomer, whose account of his recent aerial experience has been lately published, gives an account of some phenomena he observed which appear to be rather novel, and not in harmony with his former observations. That the temperature of the atmosphere becomes colder in proportion to the height is a well known fact, which Prof. Wise has found invariably during thirty nine years of adventure in the air, in which he had made 446 ascensions. The 447th, on the 30th of July, astonished him, for the higher he rose the hotter it became, till, as he expresses it, he felt as if he were approaching a conflagration. This reversal of all experience he attributes to contrary influence.

This balloon ascension was made at four o'clock in the afternoon, when on the earth the thermometer stood at 72 degrees. Nine minutes afterwards, at a height of 5,400 feet, it registered 81 degrees; at 5,600 feet it was 86 degrees; but these proportions were not always exact, as is shown by an examination of his tabular statement of the variations of heat compared with altitude. Thus, at only 1,450 feet the thermometer was 90°, and half an hour after, at 4,900 feet, it had fallen to 70°. This irregularity he explains by the fluctuation of the perpendicular and horizontal influence of the comet, and perhaps at times to the force of natural laws. But however this may be, his tables are important as showing an exceptional condition of the atmosphere. He also noted a peculiar shadow that fell across the city of Philadelphia in a direction from northwest to southeast, although there were no clouds in the sky to produce it. Professor Wise says of this remarkable phenomenon: "Nothing could satisfy my conjectures of the cause so well as the idea that the attenuated envelope of the comet was transmitting beams and rays of sunlight, with focal power, into our atmosphere, and thus producing positive and negative lines as we find them under the spectroscopic."

The New York Herald, in which his account is published, suggests that the dark appearance was simply a portion of the city which had not been reached by the sweep cleaners. Whether or not the comet was responsible for this well-defined nebula, as it certainly was for a great many shadowy theories, we are not prepared to say; but the observations made by Professor Wise deserve the investigation of meteorologists. He has always been an earnest worker in the cause of science and his reports are entitled to acceptance, whatever the scientific world may think of this particular theory.

CLOSE AT FIGURES.—The Marquis Westminster, whom Mr. Gladstone created a duke before resigning his premiership, is the richest person in England. He owns nearly all Westminster, and his wealth is something fabulous. He is a thrifty nobleman. Some years ago a gentleman saw him at a railway station, where he had bought a copy of the Echo, price one half penny. He gave the boy a three penny piece, and waited for his change. The boy had no half pence, he could not make two pence half penny change. He had nothing but the half penny. He waited for the boy to wait for his change. "Go," he said to the boy, "and get some half pence; I will wait for your return." And wait he did for the next train. But this the gentleman whom Mr. Gladstone has promoted to be a duke. He can now wear strawberry leaves on his coronet. The new duke is forty nine years old. He has a son and heir, Earl Grosvenor, who has just come of age, and who spends the paternal L. S. D. as cheerfully and eagerly as the paternal gains them.

SYDNEY SMITH, in the prime of his days, became a total abstainer. Lady Holland sympathizing with him, thus writes to her: "Many thanks, my dear, for your kind anxiety respecting my health. I not only was never better, but never half so well in my life; indeed, I find I have been ill all my life without knowing it. Let me state some of the good arising from abstaining from all fermented liquors. First, sweet sleep; having never known what sweet sleep was, I now sleep like a baby or a ploughboy. If I wake, no needless terrors, no black visions of life, but pleasing hopes and pleasant recollections. Secondly, I can take longer walks and undergo greater exertion without fatigue. My understanding is improved. I see better without wine and spectacles than when I used both. Only one evil ensues from it. I am in such extravagant spirits that I must lose blood or look out for some one who will bore or depress me. Pray leave off fermented liquors; the stomach is quite at rest; no heartburn, no pain, no distension."

It is of the elder Dumas that the following story is told: A stranger, having heard with surprise that Dumas was a quadron, called upon him to verify the fact.

"I am told," began the visitor, "that you are a quadron, Monsieur Dumas?"

"Yes," answered Dumas.

"And your father?"

"Was a mulatto, the distinguished General Dumas of the army of Italy—and a mulatto," roared the author, in tones that left no doubt of the quality of his lungs.

"And his mother," continued the intruder interrogatively.

"Was a negro," shouted Dumas, rising to his feet.

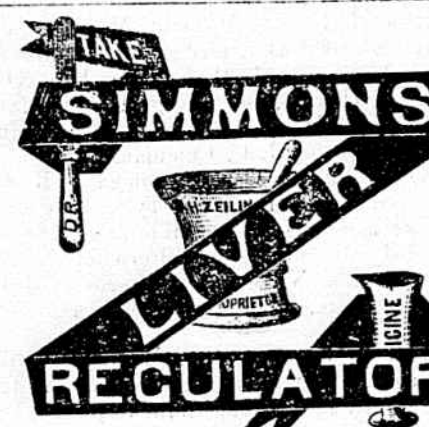

"And who, may I ask, was her mother?" continued the enterprising indefatigable bore.

"An ape, sir, an ape!" thundered the indignant author. "My family began exactly where your ends. Waiter, show that monkey the door."

Belgium has for some time abolished capital punishment, and the scheme has worked well. That little country is an exception to what has heretofore been a general rule, and followed by an increase of crime. On the contrary, crime has materially diminished. For eleven years no execution has taken place in that country, and the general state of morals is superior to any of the countries around.

There is scarcely a crime before me that is not, directly or indirectly, caused by strong drink.—Culveridge.
